The Difference Between A Republican And A Democrat.

(Charlotte News)

The difference between a Republican and a Democrat is age-old, traditional and irreconcilable. That difference has been made only the acuter in the present presidential campaign by reason of some new forces and some new species of idealisms which have been brought to the surface. We can dismiss entirely the question of personalities in the campaign, if we will. The candidates will have their individual appeals to make to the voters, no doubt, but their personalities are not decisive in the contest. There is a world of difference between them as men. Governor Cox is a fiery, progressive, alert, upstanding and forward looking statesman. Senator Harding is more dignified, polished in his utterances, modest in his deportment and is behaving himself with the prudence of an old maid in the leadership of the Republican campaign, but the difference in the personality of the men is immaterial and will not become at all important.

The difference between a Democrat and a Republican in this campaign is the difference between ideals, between politics and between principles. A lot of shouting is being done over some incidentals. Much is being said, for instance, as to how these candidates stand on the issue of liquor, but their attitude toward this question interests a very few of the voters of the country. In fact, it makes no difference what their views are. They are not the masters of government.

The American electorate will attend to prohibition without having to rely upon the chief magistrate of the nation for leadership. Other side issues are being introduced and a lot of fuss is made about them, but the cardinal distinction between a Republican and a Democrat today is a distinction in beliefs as to what government is and as to what government should be.

The Democratic party solicits the support of the people of this country at the polls on the sure ground of faith that government must essentially be "of the people, by the people, and for the people." That has been the shibboleth for the past eight years.

CENTRAL OHIO FARMS.

We have sold several farms within the last few months to North Carolina people, and we desire to announce that we will send to any one interested, our catalogue free of charge, upon request for same.

This section of very fertile land, is a natural grass and clover soil, in fact in the limestone and heavy clay districts, blue grass and clover become self seeded, and just naturally grow well, all through this section are fine flowing springs and creeks, plentiful supply of pure water the year around. The wonderful hay, corn and forage crops, the silo, the climatic advantages, the ready markets for farm products within easy reach, these things mean profit for stockmen and dairymen.

There are few sections of the United States where a greater variety of crops can be grown and where the danger from failure is less.

A total crop failure in this country has never been known. In this land of promise, with our remarkable variety of crops, WE ARE SAFE.

That is the battle-cry of the Democratic standard bearers today. In matters of legislation, in all matters where government relates to the constituent elements of the government, the Democratic platform conceives that the people themselves are to become not merely the beneficiaries but the determinants also. They shall not only receive the good things at the hands of the executive and judicial and legislative forces of the country, but they must determine the powers of these forces even. The people are the bosses according to the Democratic point of view. They are the masters of government. They are the sovereigns, the kaisers, the czars and kings, and princes in America.

On the other hand, the Republican party is standing today for the same old government beliefs that it has ever stood for. The party is being led about by the halter now by the very men who, during the past eight years, have fought stubbornly every reform proposed by the Democratic administration which made for the emancipation and alleviation of the masses. We shall not take the time to enumerate these, but they can be enumerated. And the party is appealing to the voters today to enthrone these very men in power and restore the government to a party that has always held the people as mere pawns and regarded their rights as subordinated to the rights of the few.

With the issue of progress embazoned upon the banners of the Democratic chieftains, they join reaction.

Against the Democratic theory of liberalism and humanity in government the Republicans put the theory of special interests and Big Business.

Against the Democratic principle of live-and-let-live, they propose a government of the iron fist and of military compulsion.

Against the military conception of the world's peace as embraced in the pact of the nations agreed upon at Versailles the Republicans send forth the principle of preparedness and flash their swords as the only hope for the safety and preservation of the republic.

These differences are cardinal. They are being re-emphasized at this very moment. The question for the voter to determine in the coming election is a question of the same old principles that have echoed in the corridors of every campaign. The very substance of government itself is involved in the equation. The issue as to whether government is for the few or the many is in it. The issue as to whether this nation wants to move forward along rational lines or social and moral development or proposes to lag behind every other civilized nation of the globe is in it.

And, finally, the issue is in it as to whether America wants to be the only power aside from nihilistic Russia and enmaddened Mexico to remain out of the covenant of the nations to keep the

The Women Should Vote.

All women who are eligible should not miss the opportunity to register while the books are open. Only those who are registered can vote on election day and the registration books will close next Saturday, the 23rd. Because they have not been accustomed to voting many of the women will feel a natural hesitancy in taking the step. Some will be disposed to let the opportunity pass for the time. But as the electoral franchise has been conferred upon them whether they desired it or not, with the privilege has come a duty and a responsibility which they should not seek to escape. They will share in the the responsibility for the administration of government, in which the welfare of all citizenship is involved, and they should embrace the opportunity to render the service which now devolves upon them.—The Landmark.

Pension Fund for Newspaper Men in Argentina.

A Buenos Aires dispatch of the 15th says that a pension fund for newspaper men is proposed in a bill introduced into the Argentine Congress. The measure would authorize an appropriation of 500,000 pesos to start the fund, which would be maintained and increased by contributions of five per cent, monthly, from the salaries of beneficiaries, contributions by their employers of an amount equivalent to one per cent of their monthly salaries and by donations, legacies and the proceeds of theatrical and other benefits. The fund would be supervised by the Press Club of Buenos Aires.

Persons who have been employed in journalism for 25 years and are at least 45 years of age, would receive from the fund 3 per cent of their ordinary salaries multiplied by the number of years they have served.
